SharePartXXL International GmbH Offers Extensions for Microsoft SharePoint in Web Content Management and Knowledge Management

New WebParts Complement SharePoint Based Portals with Newsletter-Functions and Taxonomies

Nuremberg, Germany – February 18, 2008 – SharePartXXL International GmbH, newly founded at the beginning of this year, will present extensions for Microsoft SharePoint in the areas of Web Content Management (WCMS) and Knowledge Management (KM) at CeBIT 2008 (4– 9 March 2008) in Hannover, Germany.

SharePartXXL is a spin-off of the SharePoint activities of contentXXL International GmbH. contentXXL is one of the leading suppliers of WCMS in the field of Microsoft .NET technology. The company brings a wealth of experience in both the areas of Microsoft .NET and WCMS to this still young, but rapidly growing, SharePoint market.

SharePartXXL develops applications, so called WebParts, which supplement the Microsoft Office SharePoint Server and the free-of-charge Microsoft Windows SharePoint Services with a range of new functions. These might typically be required for Web projects that appear on the Internet or company intranets. The performance features were originally developed for contentXXL's area of Business Content Management Systems and are now being newly implemented for Microsoft SharePoint technology.

Alongside WebParts available already for the management of newsletters, a taxonomy extension for Microsoft SharePoint will be introduced at CeBIT 2008 in Hannover, Germany. This extension allows the user, independent of the location of the stored data, to organise, classify and categorise SharePoint content according to cross-site directories (taxonomies). This allows better administration and easier access to information and documentation.

The new version of SharePoint technology introduced by Microsoft in the spring 2007 is increasingly being used by companies on this basis to develop their own solutions.

The development of SharePartXXL International GmbH's solutions is built on years of experience gathered in the areas of Microsoft .NET, Web content and knowledge management by the contentXXL teams. A further success factor is the many experienced and accredited contentXXL solutions partners who are familiar with both the WCMS as well as the SharePoint markets, where they implement customer projects.

"We have identified that the knowledge collected over the years by contentXXL about CMS and Microsoft .NET in the SharePoint field can be successfully deployed and implemented, allowing us to take advantage of the chance to create a new additional business area," explained SharePartXXL CEO Thomas Boenisch. "We want to give the SharePoint users, as well as our partners, the opportunity to expand their Internet and intranet portals with our WebParts, so that projects achieve a higher level of effectiveness. Especially in the area of WCMS and Knowledge Management, we see substantial potential. This is what we want to tackle."

The SharePartXXL Newsletter WebPart for Microsoft SharePoint is already available and incorporates a complete Newsletter Management in SharePoint solutions.

At CeBIT 2008 the company will, in addition to the Newsletter WebPart, introduce a new taxonomy expansion for Microsoft SharePoint. Effective collaboration over the Internet requires a common understanding of the relationship between separate content. This is precisely where knowledge comes into play. Who is the contact person for a product? Is there an alternative product or a description of the said benefits?

When does training take place?

Besides being able to supply the knowledge and the connections, contentXXL International SharePoint extensions also offer content presented in taxonomies (classification systems) and, as the case may be, ontologies (knowledge networks) organised, classified and categorised in the form of additional, site-spanning navigations. The information is, therefore, easier to administer and access.

All SharePartXXL products will be shown on the contentXXL International GmbH stand in hall 4, stand A26, site 40 at CeBIT 2008 in Hannover, Germany. For appointments at the exhibition contact: Michael Nutz, Manager Sales and Partner Program, michael.nutz@contentXXL.de, Tel: +49 (0)911-277-865-233.
